Human Rights Education Project:
A Joint Project of the Thomas J. Dodd Research Center
& Neag School of Education

About the Project

The Human Rights Education Project was initiated in early 2003 though conversations among Dr. Thomas (Tim) Weinland, Professor emeritus in Curriculum and Instruction at the Neag School of Education, Thomas Wilsted, director of the Dodd Research Center, and Terri Goldich, curator for the Alternative Press Collection. The project set as one of its primary goals the following:

This project seeks to use the materials of the Dodd Collections, together with talents and experiences of school and university faculty and staff to place appropriate human rights materials in the hands of teachers and students at the secondary level. Students need to see human rights in the context of both history and their own lives. They need to see human rights as the clash of issues and values, requiring comparison, analysis, and a host of thinking skills well beyond memorization. Finally, students need to see human rights in the context of personal responsibility and the realization that individuals – past and present – make a difference.

Following these initial discussions, Professor Weinland began several months of research among the Alternative Press Collection, the Dodd Papers from the Nuremberg Trials, and the Abbie Hoffman Papers. Using selections from these materials as a starting point he continued to gather other selections from newspapers and Internet resources (often the more up-to-date editions of publications which originally appeared in, and are archived in, the Alternative Press Collection.) From these materials Professor Weinland has developed several “curriculum lessons” for publication in Yankee Post – the newsletter of the Connecticut Council for Social Studies. Daniel Coughlin, a retired middle school social studies teacher, has provided important assistance in this work along with several graduate students from the Neag School of Education who have piloted some of the lessons with secondary school students.

Professor Weinland and others have presented selections from these materials at several conferences, ranging from several local programs to a regional social studies conference in Boston (NERC-2005) and the annual meeting of the National Conference for the Social Studies in Kansas City in November 2005. In addition to examining the materials, participants in these sessions have explored alternative approaches to teaching human rights questions that challenge students to consider conflicting points of view. In this way, we hope to move a student’s consideration of human rights from merely cataloguing “human wrongs” to addressing the difficult choices one must make when defining, confronting and working to alleviate those “wrongs”.

The project has enjoyed the financial support of the Treibick Family Public Outreach Endowment and the Neag School of Education. In addition it has received collaborative assistance from the Human Rights Institute.

Resources for Study of the Civil War & Abraham Lincoln

The Special Collections Department and the Iowa Women's Archives hold primary source materials that document the Civil War, 1861 - 1865 and President Abraham Lincoln, with particular focus on letters and diaries of Iowans who served in a variety of capacities (including soldiers, nurses, and supply administrators). General holdings include not only monographs, but also periodical literature such as Harper's and the London Illustrated News, and of course later journal literature. Hundreds of microforms are available in Main Media Services, and Government Publications provides a wealth of contemporary documentation.

The majority of the published items are cataloged in Infot Hawk. For a thorough listing of these materials, you can use the following search directions for Infot Hawk:
Use “Advanced Search” function and
In the “Location” drop down box, select “Special Collections,” “Government Publications,” or “Main Media Services.”
In the “Format” drop down box, limit by format to “Book” or “Archival Material” or “Microform.”
Use appropriate keywords.
If you have questions about our holdings, please feel free to contact us.

Guide to Africana Studies Manuscript and Related Resources in Cushing Memorial Library and Archives

The resources identified here represent collections created by or collected on the topics of African American, Africa and African Diaspora. Other manuscript groups, such as the papers of a family, oral histories, or the extensive photographic collections in our Reynolds files, contain material pertinent to the study of African Americans, Africa and the African Diaspora. Researchers should also consult the academic department papers for additional materials relevant to these groups. Some of these resources will be identified if possible. Some unprocessed collections are listed because they have substantial materials that deal with Africana issues. But due to other factors may never be cataloged; they include annual reports, Provoct Papers and other departmental information. Some files have been added to exist the researcher in finding pertinent information. For more information on these and other collections please contact: Rebecca Hopkins, rhpkins@tamu.edu or 979-845-1593.

Primary Source Holdings-Written

1. Abolitionist Archive of Letters, Quotations, and Photographs-1795-1910, (.4 linear ft.)
The collection includes over 1000 letters and autograph quotations from major figures in the American antislavery struggle, and several rare autographs from key British abolitionists. Many of the individuals provided selfless support; financially, morally, and writing on behalf of abolishing the “peculiar” institution of slavery. Some of the well-known abolitionists include Henry Ward Beecher, Manette K. Erskine, William Channing, William Lloyd Garrison, Joshua R. Giddings, the Grimke sisters, Gerrit Smith, Theodore Stevens, Charles Sumner, and Lewis Tappan, one of the leading financial supporters of the American Anti-Slavery Society.

2. Affleck Collection
Thomas Affleck Papers. The Mary Hunt Affleck (Mrs. Isaac Durst Affleck) segment of the collection is comprised of a number of original and revised manuscripts by the poet. There are several hundred sheets written in her own hand, original drafts in addition to Typescripts and transcripts of her work. Included in these materials are pamphlets of her poem “Black Mammy”, pieces of memorabilia, photographs, letters, a typed letter signed by J. Bette McNeil, assorted newspaper clippings, scrapbooks, with many of her published works passed down, short stories, etc. This portion of the collection represents the work of an early major Texas woman poet and literary figure. There is an extensive inventory of the collection available. For researchers interested in Mary Hunt Affleck’s works on blacks and other materials see Box 129, Box 130, Box 131, Box 132, Box 133, Box 134, Box 135, Box 136, Box 137, Box 138, Box 139, Box 140, Box 141, Box 142.

3. Asbury, Samuel Erson
Box 5, Folder 72 (8) It is a purchase agreement that states that H.C. Bean is purchasing a “Negro slave named Solomon from John Berry. The terms of the agreement are for seven years at a cost of 700 pesos, payment of 100 pesos per year. At the end of the seven years Solomon is to be liberated and his wife goes with him. This transaction occurred in Nauvoo, December 22, 1851 and is signed by John Berry.

4. Baraka, Imamu Amiri Collection
Poet, novelist, writer, activist, and advocate of black culture and political power; this is a collection developed by the curator. The collection consists of many of Mr. Baraka’s rare and popular writings. The collection includes books, poetry or postcards, limited edition prints, posters, maps, on posters, limited edition prints, photostats, clippings, notes of his work or other materials from the collection. Overview of Irish Literature and History Collections

This guide identifies manuscript collections, university records and VfMs (Vertical File Manuscripts) that are related to Irish literature and culture. The Special Collections Research Center (SCRC) of Southern Illinois University Carbondale houses a diverse body of Irish primary sources, from the personal papers of several notable Irish authors to an extensive collection of rare books and other printed materials produced during the Irish Literary Renaissance. The collections include an extensive collection of correspondence, literary manuscripts, photographs, and ephemera material as well as rare books, periodicals, pamphlets, and other printed matter. For additional assistance, visit the SCRC website.

This guide is not intended to be a complete finding aid to the collections. It serves as a preliminary research tool, providing a brief description of holdings with basic information on size, inclusive dates, types of records, and broad subject areas. More detailed descriptions of the sources listed below are available in the Special Collections Research Center (SCRC) and through SILICAT. Morris Library's online catalog, SILICAT contains bibliographic records for the majority of the manuscript collections held in SCRC, as well as books and other printed materials available at Southern Illinois University Carbondale. Finding aids for these sources are also available through the SCRC's Web site in the finding aid database AFC.

The SCRC's holdings of Irish Literature collections are listed alongside those of other institutions with strong Irish holdings in the Irish Literature Collections Portal, hosted by Emory University.

Please note that not all manuscript collections are housed in SCRC. Some collections are located at an off-site storage facility and must be requested in advance. In addition, some collections have access restrictions. Researchers are encouraged to contact SCRC to ensure that materials will be available. We are also happy to pull materials in advance of a research visit.
