This bibliography presents selected English-language articles and other works that are useful in understanding Google Book Search. It primarily focuses on the evolution of Google Book Search and the legal, library, and policy issues associated with it. Where possible, links are provided to works that are freely available on the Internet, including e-prints in disciplinary archives and institutional repositories. Note that e-prints and published articles may not be identical.

Who’s Out Front with Technology Innovation on Campus?

At this time in higher education, we need a technology innovation unit. If academic computing on your campus has become locked into production, it may be time to create a new breed of systematic technology innovation unit that curries, selects, pilots, assesses, and hands off to technical operations. This must be a unit that can manage the innovation cycle so that adoption of Web 2.0 technologies on the campus is not willy-nilly. But, the innovative unit can’t continue to support the new technologies once they’ve been vetted and implemented. That last part of the innovation cycle, the “hand off,” allows the unit to continue to innovate. No innovation unit can survive without always “going out of business.”
